Not illustrated. 1760 Excerpt: . . . the substance of several of his letters on this subject, in his own words. The direction of the meteor was from south-east to north-west. It did not appear in a globular form, as it passed over Carlisle; but tapered in the manner represented in Fig. 3. Its head seemed to be about 14 inches in diameter, and its length, from head to tail, about 5 yards. It appeared much brighter than the moon, and lightened the atmosphere to such a degree, that a person, who stood in the street, could easily have distinguished the difference between a small needle and a pin, if a they had been lying on the ground before him. It emitted several sparks as it went along, and continued in sight about 25 seconds. About a minute after it disappeared, there were two explosions immediately following one another, of a hollow noise, as loud as the report of a cannon at 2 or 3 miles distance; and, immediately after the explosions, there was heard a confused rumbling noise, as if in the air, which continued at least 20 seconds; at the same time I could perceive no wind, and the stars were remarkably bright. As for the greatest altitude, which you desire to be informed about, as I could very well retain that in my head, a gentleman in town, and myself, took that height with a theodolite, by pointing the instrument to that part of the...
